One of the first steps toward overturning school segregation occurred here in Montgomery County when civil rights icon Thurgood Marshall won an important legal victory ending unequal pay for white and black teachers.

To commemorate Black History Month, local historian Ralph Buglass will explain how the little-known 1937 case helped lay the foundation for the landmark Supreme Court decision outlawing separate white and black teachers – nearly two decades later.

Plus: a look back at Wheaton and Kensington's white and black schools of a century ago – two of which are still standing today.
